Sometimes you simply need to say well done. None of the frivolities; avoid the arduous and verbose and get to the point. A job has been done effectively and the people or persons responsible deserve a pat on the back, recognition for their efforts and labours, a doff of the cap for their toils and troubles a hearty congratulations for... okay, so I'm not taking my own advice so well here am I? Anyway, what I mean to say is this; well done to local charity 'The Ollie Young Foundation' who have reached the enormous fund raising milestone of £100,000 in the 14 months since five year old Ollie lost his life to a paediatric brain tumour which the foundation is devoted to researching. So well done to the foundation, you are doing exceptional work and well done to everyone who has been involved be it with cakes sales, swimming, running (one of them 100 miles!), donating prizes, organising race nights and all the other activity which has contributed to this amazing total. What else to say but well done (did I actually get round to it earlier; I can't remember) oh and of course, keep it up!

Earlier in the year my words were on the lips of every civilised dinner party this side of the Berkshire border (where things get decidedly less civilised of course!), at least that's the story that I've got in my head and I rather like it. The reason for this is that I mentioned, in passing but without flippancy, that an Art Society was
